part in Marshal Luché's funeral in Paris. Luché, 71 years old, had walked bareheaded in the funeral cortege from the cathedral Notre Dame to Les Invalides and had remained throughout the ceremony in the damp air for three hours.

At his bedside when the end came were his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Luché, and his son-in-law, Mr. Luché, who had been in the United States since his arrival in Paris.

Mrs. Luché, who was in the United States since his arrival in Paris, was in the United States since his arrival in Paris.

Life Story Of Myron T. Herrick, Late Ambassador Is Told

BECAME FAMOUS IN PARIS DURING WAR

Refused To Leave French Capital Even When City Was Threatened

BORN IN LORAIN COUNTY

Displayed Great Ability for Finance; Governor of Ohio in 1903

Myron T. Herrick, was born in Marion, O., a little northern Ohio, Lorain county, town, on Oct. 9, 1851. As a boy he worked on his father's farm and was educated in this country and at Oberlin college. He attended Ohio Wesleyan, from which he was graduated with honors. The expenses of his higher education were paid with money which he earned himself from such widely diversified pursuits as a cider salesman, school teacher, and from a series of articles which he wrote for a St. Louis newspaper.

He came to Cleveland in 1873 and set himself to the study of law and in 1878 after various studies and associations was admitted to the bar. In eight years he distinguished himself as a young attorney and then, in 1886, renounced the practice of law to become secretary and treasurer of the Cleveland Society for Savings, one of the strongest banks in the city.

Turns to Politics

He displayed an ability for finance as marked as that he had shown as a lawyer and was largely responsible for the continued success of the institution. In later years he was made president and chairman of the board of directors. He was also chairman of the board of the Union Carbide and Carbon Co., a director of the New York Life Insurance Co. and engaged actively in other financial fields.

It was in 1888 that he first turned to political affairs. In that year he was elected to the Cleveland city council where he served for three years. A stalwart Republican, he gained the friendship of national leaders of the party, including William McKinley and Mark Hanna, who were then planning the nomination of McKinley for the presidency in 1896.

Declines Various Posts

Personal business prevented Herrick from accepting a number of important government posts in this period. He refused the embassy to Italy and declined to become secretary of the treasury three successive times, the position being offered him by McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft.

In 1900 Herrick was elected governor of Ohio, defeating Tom L. Johnson, famous Cleveland Democrat. Herrick was defeated, however, when he ran for reelection.

In 1912, President Taft appointed him ambassador to France. He returned to run for senator in 1916 but was defeated by Allen B. POMEROY.

The most dramatic period in his career as ambassador came with the beginning of the World war in 1914. He aided American tourists who were held in Paris by war conditions. He also took over the representation of the German-Austrian interest in France.

Refuses To Leave

With the German army advancing on Paris and airplanes dropping bombs on the city, Herrick was notified that the French government was planning to retire to Bordeaux, and that practically the entire diplomatic corps would accompany it.

"If my government will permit me I am going to stay here," the American ambassador announced simply. "Paris as a center of art and culture belongs to the world. Somebody ought to stay."

He refused to leave even when military authorities informed him that the Germans were planning to blow up the French capital unless the government surrendered. At this time President Poincaré entrusted to the American ambassador the safeguarding of France's art treasures. Herrick used his personal credit with the American bank to finance the departure to Bordeaux of a number of neutral diplomats. When the battle of the Marne turned the tide in favor of the French, Herrick had made preparations to go out and beseech German military leaders to spare Paris.

When Colonel Lindbergh completed his historic New York-to-Paris flight in May, 1927, it was Ambassador Herrick who received the young flier, quartered him in the American embassy, loaned him a suit of clothes and arranged his visit in France. Herrick has been compared to Benjamin Franklin. No American since Franklin, it has been said, has attained the popularity at home and abroad of the genial, gray-haired Clevelander.

BY O. O. MINTYRE.

New York, April 1.—Diary of a modern day. Laid up and a pleasant note from my sister and to see Charles and Kathleen Morris at the Chatham. There with my wife to the station to welcome home from Florida, my mother-in-law, a young lady of seventy-three.

Home and read over an essay I considered at the time I was written four months ago the most amusing I ever wrote, yet was so useless it went into the waste basket. So to walk about town with Floyd Gibbons, the war correspondent, and we saw a whittler in a doorway on Broadway.

In the evening to the Lee Orlowski for dinner and Amos Carter, the Texas publisher, and Nannie there. And Amos told of days when he sold crabs and pictures, from door to door and recited his canvassing address, which would make the most hilarious monologue I know. So home late.

Morris Galt introduced another "celebrity cartoon" at his Chauve Souris show this season. The drop had caricatures by Ralph Barton of those Mr. West considered important. It was noticeable most of them were dramatic critics, newspaper columnists and such literary scum and we'll wager a becoming penny the producer will suffer no publicity slight for his kind thought. The new Chauve Souris sandwich, by the way, featured in delicatessens, is described as "much ham with a little Russian dressing."

Newspaper writers, being human or slightly so, enjoy little flatteries and respond to them. There is an only tolerably fair actor who seems to receive more than his meed of praise from theatrical scribblers. His performance is largely impromptu and he has a habit of singling out this writer and that for a verbal bouquet. It has proved profitable.

Now that Anita Loos has pulled a James Joseph Tunnay with the announcement she will write no more scenarios or books, it is whispered four novelists and a short story writer are slugging the literary swan song this fall to settle in Europe to loaf. They just think they will. It is a custom when success arrives for a writer to "grow tired of it all." As a rule he's just showing off. Silly things, writers!

The majestic sweep of that smart business section eastward is emphasized by the aristocratic tone suddenly coming to Lexington avenue. For years it was a shabby thoroughfare, but when Madison and Park avenues forked up, Lexington began to stir. Today it bristles with the glitter of swank hotels, skyscraper office buildings and classy shops, and real estate optimists say in another ten years Avenue A, a slum section, will be just as hot as to-day.

A fad of the moment is tinting the telephone in exotic shades—pink, heliotrope, mauve and so on. A husband in a telephone row the other evening suddenly slammed up the receiver, snatched his hat and shouted to his wife: "I'm going to a corner pay station. I can't call that scoundrel the names I want over a baby blue phone."

Night eating places recently padlocked for selling liquor sobbed they were driven to it to attract trade. Toshi, the most successful night cafes—Reuben's and Lindy's—are examples—sell no liquor.

One of the stories going the rounds—I've heard it four times lately—concerns two old maids who owned a drug store. An exaltado young lady came in all adulator declaring she wanted to make love to every man she met. "What can you give me for it?" she inquired. The old maids went behind the prescription counter and finally one of them came out and said: "My sister and I have been talking it over. We have decided to give you the drug store and $700."

They've certainly cleaned up that one, all right.

Overheard in front of the Palace: "I just got in from the coast."

The Way of the World.

BY GROVE PATTERSON.

Whatever may be your opinion of your experience, you will be interested in this statement by an educator. He is Rev. Job A. McCloy, University of Detroit. He says: "The evil which it is proposed to avoid is birth control is not as great as it is pictured. Birth controllers overemphasize the number of epileptics and vicious in the world. Besides, how can these birth controllers find that the children of defective parents will be defective? Weak-mindedness and vice are not always inevitable. Geniuses as well as imbeciles have sprung from mad parents. Saints as well as sinners have descended from vicious forebears. Moreover, epilepsy, feeble-mindedness have often been found joined together."

"Fascal was afflicted with vertigo and convulsions. Edgar Allan Poe has been classed as a psychic degenerate. Byron was subject to convulsions. Darwin seems to have suffered from chronic neurasthenia. Chopin was extremely nervous."

Addressing the Chicago Association of Credit Men, T. W. Brandt, lawyer, says people who don't pay their bills are not necessarily dishonest; they are merely optimistic. It's not far off. Much that is called optimism is merely a stupid denial of the facts. Sometimes we think we can spend more than we take in and get away with it. That's optimism—fit only for the dumb. Real optimism is not a denial of facts; it is based on facts.

Michigan house of representatives passes bill to make hunting with the bow and arrow legal. Is this progress or what? Perhaps it is. Perhaps the world would be better off with fewer firearms and more bows and arrows.

A correspondent sets us right in a kind of courteous manner. He says it wasn't Hancock who called the tariff "a local pest." It was Hancock. It appears that Windel Hancock made this sage remark during the Garfield-Hancock presidential campaign of 1880.

"Are you a loyal supporter of the federal congress?" "To a great extent," answered Senator Sorghum. "But I am impervious to the blarney of comic pictorialists that every congressman ought to wear chin whiskers."

Missrest, to new help—"Do be careful with those nets. The professor catches moths with them."

Complications in Illness.

BY ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

Most diseases, in and of themselves, are rarely fatal. One man could hardly win a battle. It requires an army to carry on a successful war.

One germ couldn't get far in producing disease. A whole crowd of one kind of germs rarely accomplishes terrible things. It is a mixture of germs, a sort of allied army of germs, that works havoc with our poor bodies.

To put it another way, it is the complications of disease that we most dread. It is these we must avoid.

When, O! when, will men and women learn that the way to escape the dangers of sickness is to give attention to the disease at its onset!

We have had another epidemic of influenza. We had a serious epidemic in 1919. We had a dreadful one in 1918. There have been lesser epidemics during this ten-year period.

What have these experiences taught us? So far as the layman is concerned, I fear he has learned little, except to be scared at the mention of the word "epidemic." The doctors have learned that almost nobody dies from influenza. The deaths are due to the complications of the disease.

On the day I am writing this I had a telegram that a friend of mine had been taken to the hospital for an operation. First, he had a mild attack of influenza and, because he has a strong body, did not consider it worth while to go to bed, or even to stay home.

The disease "went down on his lungs." First he had bronchitis and then pneumonia, involving one lung. This got better and then the other lung was involved.

Now, like King George, he has an abscess in the chest cavity. To the original germ of infection, he has added a pus germ of some sort.

No matter what the disease is, I beg of you not to neglect your trouble. The seriousness of the ailment will make certain that there will be no neglect when the aching ear, abscessed lung, or other complication arrives. There is such pain then that everybody is sent on the run for the doctor.

It is true that many calls are made on the doctor for advice about trivial ailments. But it is also true that there are many, many failures to consult the family physician at the times when he could be of positive assistance.

By the way, it is not fair to your friend the doctor, to overlook his importance at the moment when he can speedily and successfully relieve you of your disease. You should not regard him as you do the fireman. He is called on after the building is on fire. Take time for the forelock and use the doctor when he can keep you from serious trouble. The way to evade the complications of disease, is not have them at all! That is an awkward way of putting an obvious fact.

The Harding Highway Tragedy.

The Harding highway tragedy of last week, in which four young women school teachers in this and two other Ohio communities met death, should carry a lesson ever to be kept in mind by all those responsible for the development of our highway systems.

It should make manifest that too small a proportion of the $25,000,000 the state is expending annually for the construction, improvement and maintenance of our highway systems, to say nothing of the highway expenditures of lesser political divisions, is devoted to making them as safe as circumstances will permit.

In an imperatively recent week, three cars have gone off the roadway at the bridge approach, three miles east of Caledonia, at which the four young women were held within their car and drowned Friday night, which should have been, and was, taken as notice of the dangerous character. We say was taken as notice, for the reason that the state authorities had arranged to look this dangerous approach over, previous to the horror of last week, with a view to taking action to safeguard traffic at that point.

How infinitely superior to a system that requires such a sacrifice of precious lives to safeguard such danger points would be a system which would erect safeguards as the work of road construction or improvement progresses.

While it is true that there always is danger in traveling in the night season over unfamiliar roads under such storm conditions as those which marked this tragedy, we as a people nevertheless, by improving our highway systems, invite the public to make use of them and we, by inference at least, hold out to the public unfamiliar with them that such highways are reasonably safe. No doubt these four young women assumed this as they went on to their destruction, the local young woman possibly not being sufficiently familiar with the danger which lurked in the bridge approaches in the night season.

We have heard it held that the approaches to this particular bridge should be guarded by twinklers or reflectors. There is always possibility of the former going dead; always possibility that the latter may prove inefficient in a heavy fog. Even had there been such protection at this bridge, it might have proved insufficient as there is an S in the roadway there. At such points and at all other points where such a tragedy as that of last week is possible, there should be sufficient protection at the sides of the roadway to prevent a car from plunging over; not merely a light railing, but some solid construction or meshed cables strung on strong and deeply embedded posts which experience shows will give without breaking and hold a car back from a plunge even though a post or two be torn away.

Our community sorrow over the deaths of these four young women. Our hearts go out in sympathy to those to whom they were dear, but we must not stop at that. There should be persistent demand in this community, and in this county, and in every county of the state, that traffic be given adequate protection at such danger points. We can not correct the past, but we can, and should, act to prevent such horrors in the future. Let us have safe roadways, even if at the expense of less mileage.

March 27 of this year, a Chicago street railway conductor refused to accept from a woman passenger a transfer offered by her. Issued March 27, 1933, and made her pay fare. That's one trouble with us over here; we have an utterly inadequate appreciation of the historical and antique.

A "human fly" was advertised in the news columns of the Washington papers to climb up the side of a high building today, Sunday afternoon, "as a special entertainment for Easter visitors," the climbing to be preceded by a band concert and a "brief address" by "some prominent citizen." Out here in the eastern fringe of the Middle West that strikes us as rather an odd way of observing Easter.

The members of the Michigan legislature are up in arms because the makers of a popular brand of cigars has been utilizing the boys and girls of the state university up there to make "blindfold tests" of their cigarette. Why should they worry? They do not have to read the glowing testimonials to the unfading worth of that particular cigarette as an agency in the acquirement of a college education.

The wage increases of from three to five cents an hour to be paid approximately 10,000 shop employees of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific railway may appear trifling, at first glance, to the reader, but it doesn't to the management, meaning, as it does, a payroll increase of about $1,000,000. There's a world of difference between the viewpoint of the disinterested public and that of those who have to foot the bill, a fact which very frequently is not given consideration by the former.

Foreign insurance companies writing marine insurances are said to be penalizing American vessels on the ground that our vessels are supposed to have less experienced and less capable officers and seamen. How many more crews of foreign vessels, manned by inexperienced and incapable officers and crews will have to be rescued by United States vessels before foreigners get away from this fool notion?

Because he was told by one of his two sons, jailed on a charge of robbing a church and who have since confessed to having robbed thirty Chicago churches, that a certain priest was responsible for their arrest, Gaddano Meuna sought out the priest and shot him in the head, and then, the priest, having fallen, shot him twice in the back. It reads like a story from southern Italy back in the days before Mr. Mussolini inaugurated his clean-up.

offer of humanity."

No matter how the month came in, it's a lead pipe clench that March went out like a roaring lion.

It's just a bit hard to understand how the Bostonians, boasting Mr. Coolidge for senator from Massachusetts can hope to get him to acquiesce in their plan after his association of over two years with that body.

Of course, the insistence of that dry Ohio congressman who denies that there were four bottles of liquor in his grip—or any at all,
in fact—would have been a lot more impressive had his grip been waterproofed to keep it from leaking.

Another "genuine" Stradivarius, it is now claimed, has been located at Hanover, Pennsylvania. If Antonio made all the violins attributed to him, it's a clutch that he didn't limit himself to union hours, even if he did live to be ninety-three.

Scientists excavating north of Jerusalem have unearthed pottery depicting women's heads with hair bobbed dating back to 1100
B. C., which goes to show that that fad feeling was experienced away back in those days just as it is now.

As a result of a raid on the hunting lodge of the superintendent of the Roosevelt game preserve, a Portsmouth despatch tells us, a charge of illegal possession has been placed against him. At the present rate, it will be but a question of time till stories of official lawbreaking have lost their news value.

The testimony being adduced in the trial of the thirteen Ellers Benchmen, up in Chicago; charged with kidnapping and assault to kill, shows that the Chicago policemen winked at poll terrorism. Naturally. What else can be expected anywhere when the politicians exact and collect tribute from the criminal world?

To Preserve the Teeth.

Dr. W. D. Davis, director of the bureau of mouth hygiene of the Michigan department of health, decries the use of the old slogan,
"A clean tooth never decays." Speaking before a gathering of the members of the American Child Health association in Chicago, last week, he held the expression was true only for surgical cleanliness, "and surgical cleanliness," he said, "is impossible so far as we know in the mouth of a live person, and not very important in a dead one."

The doctor not only expressed regret that there is such a slogan, but also voiced still greater regret that it is yet used in the face of the fact that it is known to be untrue.

"Many teeth that are brushed decay, and many teeth that never saw a toothbrush never decay. No dentist on earth can make badly broken down and aching teeth as good as new. Why broadcast such teachings? Educational matter that is not true or is out of focus should not be used, no matter how attractive."

Dr. Davis deprecated the tendency of many school boards and teachers to accept as true the theory that toothbrush drills and cleaning tooth constitute all that is essential in a dental health program. He held use of the toothbrush a good habit, just as taking a bath and washing the face are good habits, admitting that in some cases it will help prevent decay, but he held that the teaching in many schools would carry it to the extreme.

Using the toothbrush after breakfast and before going to bed at night he held is enough.
"Why teach five times," he asked, "which is unreasonable? Why teach using gauze on the finger and bottle or salt solution daily to wash the mouth of an infant which is correctly fed and in good health, when clinical experience shows that it does more harm than good?"

"The two greatest factors in mouth hygiene," the doctor continued, "are diet and early dental attention. It has been proven quite conclusively that wrong diet promotes decay and correct diet retards decay. If we could have early attention to small defects and correct diet, I believe we could almost wipe tooth troubles off the map, even if another toothbrush was never manufactured.
This may be rank heresy, but I believe research and clinical evidence are proving it."

This may indeed sound like heresy to many who have trained themselves to follow some of the practices thus attacked; many may be loath to accept the doctor's conventions as well founded, yet it may be said in this connection that, in the discussion of his statements, there was very general professional agreement with his views, the manifest feeling being that the use of the toothbrush is being made too much of a fad and that not enough attention is being given to early care of the teeth and education in diet leading to work benefit to the teeth.

WHITMAN TO RECALL OLD FAVORITES

DALL WHITMAN will recall old favorites in a white melody to be featured in his next broadcast over stations associated with the Columbia Broadcasting System at 9 o'clock Tuesday night.

Down by the Old Mill Stream will be the first waltz to stir up sentimental recollections and this will be followed by Sweet Melody, Shady of the Old Apple Tree and After the Ball. Numbers a little more recent but far from modern will include Moonlight on the Ganges, Somebody Stole My Gal, Wildflower and Hallelujah.

In addition Whitman will feature a laugh entitled Spin and will play such current hits as Gypsy, The Song I Love and Things That Were Made for Love. According to present plans the Paul Whitman hour over the radio will continue for at least seven weeks longer, a contract having been signed with the 1927 king of the program sponsors to carry his orchestra in the air through Tuesday, May 21. Plans for the hour after that date will probably be announced in about a month.

LISTENERS NAME OWNERSHIP

Two million theatergoers can't be wrong. Therefore, radio listeners may look forward to two unusual programs to be broadcast through a coast-to-coast WEAF network on Tuesday and April 9 respectively.

These radio programs are the two Radio Keith Orpheum hours planned after a nation-wide poll to determine the most popular radio artists from the standpoint of radio listeners. The response to the entertainment vote was so great that it was necessary to arrange two programs instead of one as previously arranged. More than two million calls were cast. Belle Baker, who can even make Sousa's band worthwhile and Duke Tucker, another comedian with a gift for getting into a tight spot, will be the first to appear in the first program which goes on the air at 11 to 12 o'clock Tuesday night. Lady Alice and her orchestra are also at the head of the parade. Other artists to include the name of Van and Schenck, Ted Lewis and Musical Comedy. Vincent Lopez and his orchestra and Nick Lucas will appear in a manner decided by the vote.

SAN ARTIST WILL PLAY

REINALD WERRENATH, except for the use of a solo has been also from the air in the past few days. He will be a feature of the Tuesday program at 10 o'clock on the NPO system at 10 o'clock Tuesday night.

OLD LOVE SONGS TO BE SUNG

THAT ST. MARY'S will feature a series of songs from the past few days of yesterday's program broadcast over the WEAF network of the NPO system at 10 o'clock Tuesday night.
